Following the success of the previous International Nutrition & Diagnostics Conference we are delighted to invite you to the next year's event on 9 – 12 October 2017 in Prague, Czech Republic.

INDC 2017 will once again bring together medical doctors, analytical chemists, biochemists, chemists, and those in the clinical diagnosis seeking research breakthroughs, new technologies and new approaches in the field of nutrition, food diseases, food components and health trends.

Nutrition, food science and diagnostics have improved their importance in today´s human´s life style. Food diseases, nutritional disorders, and malnutrition habits are becoming major public health concerns recently. It is important for people to balance nutrition and physical activity nowadays, therefore is determinant to prevent and manage food diseases.

The meeting will feature an extensive scientific programme of oral and poster presentations which will focus on providing the newest research results to address the diverse challenges faced by today´s scientists.

In addition to the scientific content, INDC 2017 will include an industrial exhibition where delegates can learn about the latest developments in instrumentation for clinical diagnosis, and separation science. There will also be a business meeting which will give the opportunity to delegates to meet potential partners and researches.
